

The Harry Golden Papers

Biography

Charlotte writer, Harry Golden was born Harry Goldhirsch on May 6, 1902 in eastern Galicia, now part of Poland. In 1905, he immigrated to America with his parents Leib and Anna Klein Goldhirsch. The family settled in the Lower East Side of New York City. The family changed its name to Goldhurst. Leib Goldhurst worked as a teacher and later served as the editor of the Jewish Daily Forward.

The young Harry Goldhurst was an excellent scholar and equally well read in areas of literature, history and philosophy. During the day, Harry peddled newspapers, straw hats and clerked for Oscar Geiger's Fur Manufacturing Company. At night, he attended East Side Evening High School and graduated in 1921. For the next three years, Harry attended night classes at the City College of New York, but he left before graduating. While working for Oscar Geiger, became involved with the Round Table Literary Club from 1918 to 1921. It was through this organization that Harry's rounded off his education. He became a public speaker for the Socialist Party and social reforms.

After leaving college, Harry worked as a stockbroker and by 1926 he was the head of the firm Kable and Company. That same year he married Genevieve Alice Marie Gallagher, a schoolteacher. The couple had four sons, Richard (b. 1927), Harry Jr., (b. 1927), William (b. 1929) and Peter (1938-1957).

Three years later Harry's brokerage firm filed bankruptcy and he was charged with mail fraud. Found guilty, Harry spent three and half years in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary. He returned to New York in 1933 and worked for his brother Jacob, who ran a hotel. However, Harry's new aspiration was to become a journalist. Between 1939 and 1941, he sold advertisements for the New York Daily Mirror and the New York Post. It is reported that he worked at a number of southern newspapers at this time, but there is no verification of the exact locations.

By late 1941, after a stint in Norfolk, Virginia, Harry settled permanently in Charlotte. He changed his name and thus Harry Golden was re-born. His first job was selling advertising and writing editorials for the Charlotte Labor Journal and the Charlotte Observer. It was in Charlotte, that Harry Golden's reputation as a defender of civil rights and social justice solidified. In October 1942, he worked with the Charlotte News to print his own newspaper, the Carolina Israelite. Two years later Harry assumed all publishing and printing duties. This enabled him to publish the Israelite on a regular basis. The paper was solely Golden's creation. He sold the advertisements, wrote the articles and built an international circulation of 30,000. In 1958, a fire destroyed his subscription lists and this was soon followed by the publication of his criminal record. However, Golden and the Carolina Israelite persevered until it folded in the late 1960s.

Harry Golden became the spokesperson for the rights of the oppressed, whether by race, religion or economic status. His articles, although satirical in nature, raised subjects that were often taboo in the south, including equal rights for Blacks, discrimination against Jews. Harry wrote for the Nation, Commentary Life, and Congress Weekly. In 1961, he covered the Eichmann Trial.

In 1958, Golden became a best-selling author with the publication of his essays entitled Only in America. One year later the book was adapted by famed playwrights Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee and presented on Broadway. Other works by Golden include Jews in American History: Their Contributions of the United States of America with Martin Rywell (1950), Jewish Roots in the Carolinas: A Pattern of America Phil-Semitism (1955), For 2 cents Plain (1959), Enjoy, Enjoy! (1960) Carl Sandburg (1961), Five Boyhoods (edited by Martin Levin, 1962), You're Entitled (1962), The Harry Golden Omnibus (1962), Mr. Kennedy and the Negroes (1964), So What Else is New? (1964), Ess, Ess, Mein Kindt (1966), The Best of Harry Golden (1967), The Right Time; an Autobiography; an Autobiography (1969), So Long As You're Healthy (1970), The Israelis; Portrait of a People (1971), The Golden Book of Jewish Humor (1972), The Greatest Jewish City in the World (1972), Travels through Jewish America (with Richard Goldhurst, 1973), Our Southern Landsmen (1974) and Long Live Columbus (1975). At the time of his death, Golden left an unpublished manuscript, "America, I Love You."

Harry Golden was honored throughout his life by colleges, his colleagues and a number of organizations. In 1969, the University of North Carolina at Chapel established a Harry Golden Lecture Series. He was a member of the American Jewish Congress, the N.A.A.C.P, the Southern Regional Council, the Catholic Interracial Council and B'nai B'rith.

On October 2, 1981, Harry Golden died in his beloved, adopted city. He is buried at the Hebrew Cemetery in Charlotte, North Carolina.
